

Vacancy/Partnership in Humanities Start-Up

Are you interested in shaking up the market for philosophical training and coaching? The mission of this venture is to provide humanities/philosophy-inspired services to small and medium-sized enterprises in the German-speaking market. To reach this goal, I am currently looking for content producers (who also may become partners) to develop a prototype-training for a first, yet-to-be-found client. Your current place of residence can be anywhere in the EU—we work 100% remote. The venture is currently participating in RU Groningen's business accelerator VentureLab.

You are

- ... a master student or PhD candidate (or have just completed any of these phases); also late-Bachelor students are encouraged to reach out
- ... well up on humanities, social sciences, anthropology, religious studies, psychology, adult education, philosophy or ethics (a background in philosophy is not a requirement)
- ... experienced (or curious) about teaching others about your discipline
- ... comfortable to write and speak German and English in a professional environment (Dutch is not a requirement)
- ... willing to spend around one day per week to launch a new business—without (initially) being paid for it
- ... at a disadvantage in today's society; then you are especially encouraged to reach out

Your role is

- ... to co-develop an ethics training for businesses tailored to the client's needs
- ... to co-conduct philosophical trainings/workshops for the client's employees
- ... to try out teaching concepts that are new, and haven't been tested yet
- ... to write philosophical texts on behalf of the client

You enjoy

- ... working self-organized, without receiving a grade, and without a boss
- ... being creative, and to create change (rather than enjoying the comfort of the status quo)
- ... reflecting on things and humans around you
- ... failing, and learning from failures
- ... when a theory does not have to be perfectly thought through
- ... having conversations with people you have not met before
- ... giving talks in front of a small audience (or even in public?)
- ... thinking interdisciplinary, and linking your academic background to the client's business and philosophical contexts
